but especially, are in the middle and higher classes of society, among the intelligent and accomplished of our fellow citizens. These considerations render the guilt of the greater more aggravated, not because these persons are less mean, or less worthy of sympathy than the others; but, because, from their position they have a much stronger sense of right and society looks more in their favor. I hope, Gentlemen, that those officers, and all others who prevail in this city, will receive from you prompt and efficient attention. The sentiment entertained by some persons that certain evils must be tolerated and that certain felonies cannot be suppressed, is, I respectfully submit, fallacious. When analyzed, this proposition involves the inability of man for self-government—a very poor doctrine to be professed by republicans.

With three remarks, Gentlemen, I respectfully refer you to your apartment and your duties.

I have now mentioned all the subjects which it is made my duty by law to bring to your notice, and have referred to others in which I am liable at this time particularly interested. These I have reserved for your consideration.

The District Attorney is the officer appointed by law to aid you with his advice in the discharge of your duties, and you may also seek advice from the Court.

The Sentimental Attorney is not allowed to go with you when you visit the question of irrigation industries.

You have the right to make a permanent or any subject connected with the administration of criminal law, and which you deem sufficiently important to receive the notice of the public authorities. It is your duty to keep your proceedings secret. You will appoint one of your men or a clerk, who should keep informed of your proceedings for the use of the District Attorney.

Your formal will provide for your decessions, and administer oaths to witnesses.

The highest number which may compose the Grand Jury is twenty-three, and the smallest number is sixteen; twelve not being to find an indictment.

An officer will be sworn and detailed to your service. I hope that our mutual labors at this, my last official term, may result in the greater security of persons and property in this City, by producing higher respect for the Courts and the Law.

To the pure mind, the approval of conscience is of process value. It attends the faithful performance of duty. May all our duties here be so done that we shall justify not only before our fellow citizens, but when we reassemble under circumstances so different from those that surround us now, at the Bar of the SUPREME JUDGES of the judges and juries of Earth.

This is accounted for by the fact that the steamers of this Company were withdrawn soon after the 1st of October, some three weeks earlier than last year, which, independently of its effect on the business of the road, deprived the Company of a large income from that source.

We hear of about $300,000 in bars going to Boston for the Wednesday steamer; only $200,000, however, have yet been bought.

The business of the Clearing-House to-day was

The inquiry, however, is active, especially in stock circles.
